JUDICIAL VOTES COUNT

The League of Women Voters of Ohio (LWVO) is once again partnering with the Ohio Supreme Court, Bar Association, and others on "Judicial Votes Count" (JVC), an online website with information on candidates running for judge across the state. Additionally, the JVC website contains educational information about what judges do and how to evaluate candidates.

Judicial candidates across the state have been given a September 4 deadline to complete their questionnaires, and responses are published on the JVC website, generally within 24 hours of receipt.

Visit online at judicialvotescount.org, and make your judicial vote count!

That is the mantra this month in the office. Our Voter Service VP Mario and her band of volunteers have been registering voters throughout the Greater Dayton Area and our office is opening its doors to register voters from 9 am to 1 pm until October 9, the last day to register before the November 6 election. Do your part: Tell your family, friends and neighbors to register to vote if they haven’t; check to make sure they’re still registered if they have; or update their registration if they’ve moved. Make Election Day a holiday; invite your friends to celebrate democracy over dinner or drinks as you watch election results roll in! Our Voters Guide team, led by Editor Lucy Anne McKosky is busy coordinating the 98th edition for the Greater Dayton Area 2018 election.

Thank you to all who have donated to put the Voters Guide on the street. This would not happen without your generous & thoughtful donations.
WOMEN’S HISTORY TRIVIA

SOURCE: nwhp.org/events/october/

She was born Mary Gindhart in 1905 in West Collingswood, NJ, the daughter of Isaac D. Gindhart Jr., a telephone company executive, and Mary Simon Gindhart, a music teacher. She went to public schools in Haddonfield and Moorestown, NJ, and earned pocket money picking strawberries for a penny a box.

While still a teenager, she married a musician, Arthur Herbert, but he died three years later, leaving her with a daughter to support. She went to work in Philadelphia and took evening courses in merchandising and business administration at the University of Pennsylvania.

She left her job when she married Mr. Roebling, becoming a housewife again until his death. Siegfried Roebling died in 1936, of a heart attack. Mrs. Roebling's father and father-in-law then urged her to try her hand at running the bank. She had preparation for the job: she had worked for a Philadelphia investment house while taking business courses at night and, the two men told her, she had another important qualification, common sense.

The rest was banking history. She took her husband's seat on the bank's board and, on Jan. 21, 1937, was elected president.

In a speech in 1965, Mrs. Roebling said: "As a woman who for years has competed in the business world, I would be the first to agree that the American woman has almost unbelievable economic power, but American women, like women of all civilized nations, do not use the influence their economic power gives them."

Mrs. Roebling's own economic power came initially through inheritance, but she increased it vastly once it fell into her hands. She was bequeathed a large block of Trenton Trust stock by her millionaire second husband, Siegfried Roebling, whose family had long been prominent in engineering and cable manufacturing. He was a great-grandson of John A. Roebling, who designed the Brooklyn Bridge, and a grandson of Col. Washington A. Roebling, who completed its construction.

"Mary G. Roebling didn't wait for women's lib," Forbes magazine once wrote, "she was ahead of it, way ahead."

By 1970, Mrs. Roebling estimated that 300 other American women had become presidents or chairwomen of banks. But in 1978, when she became chairwoman of the Women's Bank, she argued that there still was a place in the business world for banks that were operated specifically for female customers.

"Women's banks can be better listeners for women and give them more time, advice and direction than an ordinary bank would give," she told an interviewer. "It's a psychological thing, really."
